Part Three : Comprehension(35 points)

Read the following passage carefully, then answer the questions that follow.

I left Gaza in 1963 to study at Alexandria University and, after I graduated, I found work at Aswan. I was proud to help finish the biggest construction project in Egypt since the Pyramids.

It had all started long before, of course. The old dam had never been high enough and so, in 1960, the new project began. We finally finished in 1970 and, believe me, the Aswan High Dam really is high!

It made a huge difference. First of all, it produced half the country's electricity, and it brought power to many areas for the first time.

Then there's the water. The famous floods had actually been quite unreliable, and there often used to be both destructive floods and disastrous droughts. If we had not built the dam, farmers would have faced dangerous floods and droughts many times since then. What's more, Aswan provided water for huge areas of new farmland.

People often say that Aswan's designers should have included channels to let the rich river sediments pass through and fertilise the land. And they're right. The old dam was like that, and we could have done the same thing. If we had, farmers wouldn't have needed to start buying expensive artificial fertilisers.

On balance though, I think Aswan has been very good for Egypt. If the Egyptians hadn't built it, their country couldn't have developed in the way that it has.

Section A:(25 points)*Questions:

- They (line 13) refers to
 - Aswan designers
 - people
 - farmers
 - sediment
- The opposite of the word natural is
